CHAPTER I.

ORGANIZATION—FLAG PRESENTATION, STORM AT SEA, &c.

The companies comprising the Fiftieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, were recruited, as follows: A, C, and part of I, from Schuylkill County; B, E, and part of H, from Berks; D, from Susquehanna; F, from Lancaster; G and K, from Bradford; part of H, from Chester; and part of I, from Luzerne. Rendezvousing at Camp Curtin, the regiment was organized on the 28th day of September, 1861, by the choice of the following officers:

Colonel—Benjamin C. Christ, of Minersville, Schuylkill County.

Lieutenant Colonel—Thos. S. Brenholtz, of Reading, Berks County, (Captain of Company H.)

Major—Edward Overton, Jr., of Towanda, Bradford County.

Adjutant—John A. Rogers, of Lancaster County, and 1st Lieutenant of Company F.

Quarter Master—Dr. Alfred Jones, of Schuylkill County.

Surgeon—David J. McKibbin, of Schuylkill County.

Assistant Surgeon—Joseph P. Vickers.

Sergeant Major—Henry A. Lantz, of Reading, Berks County.

Hospital Steward—Alexander H. Shaffer, private of Company G.

On the 1st of October, Andrew G. Curtin, Governor of the State, presented the regiment a beautiful silk flag, which was received by Colonel Christ, who returned to the authorities of the

Decoded 10 February 1945

State his most grateful thanks. He assured the Governor that the confidence reposed in the men of the Fiftieth Regiment would be one of its incentives to prompt duty, and that while there was a man left standing, or an arm could be raised to strike a blow, that flag should be borne aloft in defiance of all the foes that might assail it. It was their emblem of trust and confidence, and as such it should be returned to the State that had reposed it to their care, with its stripes unmarred and its stars undimmed.

The Harrisburg Telegraph adds: "That certainly no nobler or more enthusiastic set of men have yet left the State, and we confidently expect for them all a most useful and glorious service in suppressing the rebellion."

After which the regiment took transportation for Washington, D. C., where it arrived late in the night of the second.

On the third, it encamped on Kalorama Heights.

On the morning of the fourth, the first detail was made for picket duty. After the guard was formed, Colonel Christ delivered a short address to the men, showing them the danger of carelessness and inattention to duty, also reciting the punishment for sleeping on post, as laid down in the "Blue Book." Pointing to the sun, he remarked, that "As sure as yonder luminary shines, the picket found sleeping on his post will be shot."

October 9th, the regiment broke camp and returned to Washington, where it took cars for Annapolis, Md., here it was quartered in the Naval Buildings until the eleventh, when it was assigned to Brigadier General I. I. Steven's Brigade, of Major General T. W. Sherman's Corps, and encamped a short distance from the town, where it remained until the 19th.

During the trip from Harrisburg to Washington, D. C., an accident occurred at Goldsboro, Pa., in which E. S. Warner, of Company "D," had his arm mashed between the cars.

While quartered in the Naval Buildings, the house was filled with smoke from a defective flue, causing an alarm of "Fire," when quite an excitement took place, and during the panic several members of Company "B" were severely hurt.

For some unexplained reason, the commissary stores for the regiment failed to reach Annapolis until after the provisions, which the men had in their haversacks, were exhausted. The Forty-sixth

New York Volunteers kindly shared their rations with the Fiftieth, from this generous act sprung up an attachment between the two regiments, which lasted during the entire four years' service.

The regiment was armed with old flint lock Harper Ferry muskets changed so as to admit the use of the percussion cap. Many of these muskets were, as the men often remarked, made to shoot around a corner.

While encamped on Kalorama Heights, every morning after the pickets were relieved from duty, the detail were marched out by the officer of the guard and ordered to fire off its guns at a large target. It was a very rare thing for a shot to hit the board, notwithstanding, some of the men were at home considered crack marksmen.

These muskets were afterwards exchanged for the Austrian Rifle, a small gun weighing eight pounds and of great beauty, carrying a ball of 67-calibre, fifteen hundred yards.

The Fiftieth being the only regiment in the Ninth Army Corps having guns of this calibre, it was deemed inexpedient to transport ammunition for one regiment, hence in 1863, it was compelled to exchange for the Springfield Rifle, which was done by the men with regret. The Springfield not being near so pretty and about four pounds heavier.

While the regiment was quartered in the different camps, it was thoroughly exercised in squad, company and regimental drills.

On the 19th of October, 1861, Companies A, B, C, D and E., under command of Colonel Christ, embarked on the Winfield Scott, and F, G, H, I and K, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, embarked with the 100th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the Ocean Queen. The vessels immediately proceeded to Hampton Rhoads, where they remained until the night of the 30th, when the entire fleet, under command of Commodore Dupont and General T. W. Sherman, weighed anchor and proceeded to sea, sailing under sealed orders for some unknown point.

A beautiful scene was presented on the morning of the 31st, as the sun shone brilliantly out over the world of waters, which seemed to be agitated by some unseen power. By night the clouds above and the water beneath seemed to be in angry combat, using our vessels as foot balls; one moment down in the hollow between two great waves, the next on the summit, and then plunging down the dizzy height on the opposite side almost with lightning speed. The storm continued to increase until the night of the 1st of November, while rounding Cape Hatteras, the Winfield Scott, an old vessel utterly unseaworthy, sprung a leak and the vessel was barely saved from foundering. The masts were cut away, guns, tents, knapsacks and every thing loose was thrown overboard. Signals of distress having been hoisted, brought the Gunboat Bienville to its assistance, but the severity of the gale rendered assistance impossible.

A great wave dashed the Bienville against the Scott, threatening the destruction of the latter, hence all that remained to be done was to stick to the pumps, and by almost superhuman efforts the vessel was kept afloat.

The Ocean Queen carried her precious burden of 1,500 souls safely through the entire storm.

On both vessels incidents occurred during the storm that furnished considerable amusement afterwards.

Several officers on the Scott were in the cabin playing cards when the announcement was made that the vessel was sinking—one immediately fell upon his knees and began praying very earnestly for the salvation of his soul; another grasped him by the coat collar remarking, “no time for praying now, we must work or sink.”

When the order was given to throw overboard every thing that was loose, the very first thing pitched out by the men was the life preservers, of which the vessel had a good supply.

Very few of the men had ever been on a vessel before, and had no idea “what those little round tin things were for.”

CHAPTER II.

CAPTURE OF HILTON HEAD—BEAUFORT, &C.

The fleet commanded by Commodore Samuel F. Dupont, consisted of fifty vessels, of which two transports were lost and as many gunboats seriously damaged, losing their cargoes.

Notwithstanding, the storm having dispersed the fleet, one vessel after another began to reach the harbor of Port Royal, on Sunday, November 3d. About four o'clock in the afternoon, five rebel gunboats, hitherto concealed behind a headland, boldly ran down the harbor and attacked the gunboats of Dupont's fleet. But after three-quarters of an hour's sharp skirmishing, Commodore Tatnall, of the rebel "Mosquito fleet," was glad to fly back as precipitately as he had come forth. On Thursday following, about half past seven A. M., a clear calm morning, one of Commodore Dupont's boats firing upon a rebel steamer elicited an instant reply, and in an hour afterward, the Union gunboats were busily at work peppering, not only the rebel steamers, but also the batteries on the shore.

At two o'clock P. M., the rebels were in utter rout, and half an hour after the stars and stripes floated over Fort Walker.

As the emblem of liberty was run up the flag staff shout after shout burst from the soldiers and sailors who had witnessed the contest.

The regiment now went into camp on the island, and was employed in building fortifications until the 6th of December.

On the evening of November 9th, a volunteer foraging party of one-hundred men, under command of Capt. Wm. H. Telford, Lieuts. J. C. Foot and Michael McMahon, passed beyond the picket lines a considerable distance when the order was given to encamp for the night. Fires were immediately built and preparations for supper were progressing finely, when it was discovered that a line of gray coated men deployed as skirmishers, were advancing toward us, without a word of command, every man grasped his musket and prepared for action. The clicking of the gun locks on both sides was distinctly heard, and had it not been for the presence of mind of Private M. A. Coolbaugh, of Company "K," who at this moment called out, "Who are you?" and then said, "We are Union men," no doubt a fatal conflict would have taken place. The skirmishers belonged to the Eighth Regiment, New Hampshire Volunteers. Neither regiment knew of the others presence, hence the almost fatal conflict.

This handful of men there exhibited the spirit that won for the regiment in future engagements the kindly recognition of the authorities at Washington.

On the 6th of December, the regiment was sent by steamer to Beaufort, S. C., to take possession of the island, where it arrived about midnight. Pickets were immediately thrown out under command of Captain J. B. Brandt, of Company "A." Early in the morning of the 7th, a company of Rebel Cavalry made its appearance on the Shell road just beyond the town, when a short engagement took place, and Captain Barnwell, of the Rebel Army, was wounded. This was the regiment's first experience in combating the foe. The only casualty during the engagement was the wounding of Jacob Gertler, private of Company "C."

The regiment proceeded immediately to the Port Royal Ferry and different points on the island to do picket duty, which was its principal work during its entire stay on the island.

December 9th, three companies under Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz moved out the Shell road. Company "A" was left at the fork of the Shell and Seabrook roads. Companies "E" and "K" were taken to the Ferry. Six men were posted on the causeway to observe the enemy's movements. Soon after six or eight shots were fired by the enemy, and an effort was made, by them, to burn the house on the end of the causeway. Next morning, (December 10th, 1861,) Lieutenant Ransom's Battery opened fire upon the enemy and drove them from their works on the opposite side of the river. Privates Colter and Abrams, of Company "K," volunteered to swim over and bring back the small boat, so that we might send over a force to secure the ferry and flat boats. While they were crossing, a horseman came rapidly down the causeway on the enemy's side, waving a flag of truce, and upon Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz answering the signal, rode to the water's edge and inquired of the swimmers as to who was in command there. They referred him to Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz and offered to take him over, this he declined, but invited the Colonel over. Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, Lieutenants Lusk and Kelly, (of Stevens' Staff,) after the swimmers had brought the boats to our side, crossed over; the Colonel left the boat and advanced up the causeway, and held the following conversation:

"Your rank?"

"Sergeant."

"You represent whom?"

"Captain Barnwell."

"What is your object in coming here under a flag of truce?"

"I was sent by Captain Barnwell to ascertain whether the enemy occupied that island."

"Well, I should think that Captain Barnwell knew that by this time?"

"Well, it does look like it."

"What does this firing mean?"

The Colonel replied: "You have no right to demand that, but tell Captain Barnwell, you would not have been molested for the present; but for the firing upon our pickets and the wanton attempt to burn that building."

"Why, I was not aware of that."

"Yes, the evidence is still before your eyes, the house is still burning."

Well, said he: "What do you intend by this war?"

The Colonel replied: "It is not my object in coming to receive a flag of truce to answer questions such as these, and it is perhaps worse than useless for us to discuss matters for which armies are now contending; but, I feel like saying to you, that when you lay down your arms and return to peaceable pursuits, and once more become loyal citizens, we will return to our homes, and not before, for we have come to preserve the Union."

He rejoined: "Do you mean we are to take the oath of allegiance?"

The Colonel replied: "No, disband your armies, and permit the laws of the land to be executed, and no oath will be required of you."

Rebel: "And if we do not?"

Colonel: "But you must."

Rebel: "Yes, we'll submit, (rather a strong expression filled this space.)"

Colonel: "We intend to compel you to submit. But, if you have nothing of importance to communicate we will close our interview. Tell Captain Barnwell, that for the present, we intend occupying yonder island, the future about which you are so solicitous will speak for itself. Good morning."

The Colonel and his party returned to the island. Soon after it was ascertained from negroes that the object of the flag of truce was to gain time to take Captain Barnwell, who had been wounded by our pickets, to a place of safety.

Immediately after returning to the island, Colonel Brenholtz took twelve men and crossed over the ferry, and tore down the building on the enemy's side, which they used as a barricade. This was accomplished right in the enemy's presence, and more than four times our number; but under the terror inspired by the cannonading, not daring to molest us. The negroes report that their masters regarded the tearing down and carrying off of their building under their eyes, as a cool operation.

During the morning of December 11th, 1861, the enemy were discovered throwing up earthworks, on the opposite side of the river, near the ferry. A messenger was at once sent to General Stevens, who immediately ordered the balance of the regiment, the Battery and the Seventy-ninth New York, to the ferry, where they arrived about four o'clock on the morning of the 12th. The battery opened fire soon after daylight. Lieuts. Lantz and Taylor, with a small party, were sent over to discover the position of the enemy's guns. They were obliged to retreat hastily to their boats, without accomplishing anything more than that the enemy seemed to be in considerable force. The morning of the 13th being clear, Colonel Christ, Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz and Major Morrison, of the Seventy-ninth New York, reconnoitered the enemy's works and found two guns had been mounted. About noon, a report was received from one of our outer picket posts that the enemy were on the island. The reserve was immediately marched to the scene, part of Company "K" was deployed as skirmishers and forwarded through the wood to the place where we expected to find the enemy. A party of our own men who were out without the knowledge of the pickets, were seen by them at a distance and were taken for rebels.

HEAD-QUARTERS, DISTRICT OF PORT ROYAL.
BEAUFORT, S. C., December 8th, 1861.

LIEUT. COL. BRENHOLTZ,

Sir:—In command of three companies of the Fiftieth Regiment which has been assigned to you, you will move at five o'clock to-morrow morning, proceed to Port Royal Ferry and relieve Lieutenant Colonel Armstrong now stationed there. You will observe closely the ferry, the adjacent main and the shores of Port Royal Island on either hand. You will send small parties, each under the charge of an officer, to the neighboring plantations to ascertain the amount of transportation, forage and provisions they will supply to the command, and will take the necessary measures to save them for its use. It is said the navigation of the river, separating the island from the main, has been obstructed, both above and below the ferry, by piles driven across. Ascertain the facts and stop further proceedings of that kind. You will take every precaution to guard against surprise, will endeavor to send daily reports, noting carefully everything you learn in regard to the several points to which your attention has been called.

Truly and respectfully,

Your most obedient,

(Signed,)

I. I. STEVENS,

Brig. Gen'l Commanding.

'In compliance with the above order. On the 14th, Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, Lieutenant Kellog and four men of Company "K," started in a small boat to sound the channel with a view of ascertaining whether and to what extent it had been obstructed. They found the channel clear and a depth of from fourteen to twenty feet, except at one point about two miles above the ferry where the enemy had driven in spiles and sunk oak logs. The obstruction extended about twenty feet into the channel. The enemy had been compelled to abandon the work before destroying the entire channel. They found the channel to have sufficient width for large boats to pass through.

On the 21st of December, the portion of the regiment that had been placed under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, and stationed at the ferry, was relieved and ordered back to Beaufort, here on Christmas day, the men got up a ball on the regimental camp ground, and cards of invitation were issued to the officers. A violin, drum and three brass horns, were the instruments used to furnish music, to which officers and men "tipped the light fantastic toe," and merriment and good feeling prevailed undisturbed.

While this pleasant time was being had in camp, Captain Parker, of Company "H," with his company and Lieutenant J. C. Foot, and part of Company "D," crossed the Broad River in small boats from Rev. Barnwell's plantation, with the intention of capturing a picket post; who hearing the muffled dip of the oars, took the alarm and hastened away for re-inforcements.

January 1st, 1862, the regiment accompanied General I. I. Stevens in his attack on the Rebel Fort at Port Royal Ferry. The part taken in this engagement will be fully expressed in Colonel Christ's official report, which is as follows:

BEAUFORT, S. C., January 2d, 1862.

CAPT. H. STEVENS, A. A. G.,

Sir:—I respectfully submit the following: According to special order No. —, I left our encampment at Beaufort at 5½ o'clock P. M., December 31st, 1861, with four companies of my command, viz: C, E, F and K, and proceeded along the Shell road in the direction of Port Royal Ferry to the Cross Roads, where I was joined by Companies D and H. We then proceeded along the Shell road to the six mile post, where we bivouacked until 2½ o'clock A. M., January 1st, 1862, when I again took my line of march, under the direction of the guide, to a point on Brick Yard Creek. From this latter point, I was ordered by the General Commanding to a point called the "Brick Yard," on the upper end of Port Royal Island, and as soon as boats were furnished me, to push across Coosaw River, and landed at the "Adam's House," where I arrived at 12½ o'clock p. m., and immediately formed a junction with Companies A, B, G and I, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, who had reached this point from Beaufort by boats. The whole regiment then took their position in the centre of the Brigade, and proceeded with it, under heavy cannonading of the enemy, over a narrow causeway, and along a road leading to the Port Royal Ferry. When within three-quarters of a mile of the Fort, I was ordered, with the right wing of my command, on the enemy's right, with a view to support Colonel Fenton, of the Eighth Michigan, who was gallantly leading his command in the face of a Battery, on the enemy's left. I accordingly moved forward, taking the precaution to throw out small skirmishing parties, the better to watch the movements of the enemy, and to guard against surprise. After moving forward about three hundred yards, my advance was fired upon by the enemy from the wood on our left. I called in my skirmishers, and immediately put my command on the double quick, until within good musket range, when I discovered from 400 to 500 of the enemy forming into line of battle, and evidently preparing to give us a warm reception. I, however, anticipated his movements, and before his line was completed, mine was formed and ready for action. I immediately commenced firing, and I believe with telling effect, for, at the third volley, the enemy broke and beat a hasty retreat towards the wood. I again rapidly pushed forward, with a view to cut off his retreat, and prevent a junction with their main body, when I was arrested in my further progress by shells from our gun boats, which now came pouring in among them, making sad havoc in their already decimated ranks. After firing one more volley at their broken and disordered ranks, we retired about 200 yards out of the range of the gun boats, and were subsequently ordered to take a position near the Fort, where we bivouacked for the night, and to-day, January 2d, recrossed the Coosaw and reached our encampment at Beaufort at 5 o'clock p. m. Although the whole of my command were within range of the enemy's cannon for a half hour, and a portion of them within one hundred yards of a detachment of his

(the enemy's) infantry, and for sometime sustained a heavy fire, I have no killed to report, and none wounded, save M. Werdenhammer, of Company "E," a slight wound in the right foot; and Ensign Herbert, slightly wounded in the leg by a spent piece of shell. A piece of shell also struck the flagstaff in the Ensign's hand.

I cannot close this report without expressing my decided approbation of the conduct of both officers and men of my command—to the officers, for anticipating almost every order, thereby rendering my portion of the work comparatively easy; and to the men, for their strict attention and prompt compliance with every command. All of which is respectfully submitted.

B. C. CHRIST.

On the night of February 10th and 11th, 1862, Captain Dimock and Lieutenant Foot repelled an attack of the enemy on Barnwell Island in a very creditable manner. The duties performed by the regiment during its term of duty at the ferry was acknowledged by the General in the following letter:

Sir:—Your evening report has been received. Captain Elliott, in command of four companies of the Seventy-ninth Highlanders, will move at one o'clock and report to you for duty. They are sent as a reserve and to be in readiness in the event, the work should prove more serious than is now apprehended. You have undoubtedly looked well to the position of the Battery to cover your reconnoissance, and have your own troops in hand to act. Each detail should be thoroughly studied. The troops of your own regiment you have assigned to the work as well as the command of Captain Elliott should be kept close in hand to be ready for any emergency. The enemy cannot be permitted to construct works on the site of the old fort, nor can we permit them to post pickets there. You will prevent both. HEAD-QUARTERS, ADVANCE POSTS.
GREY'S HILL, April 1st, 1862.

BRIG. GEN'L STEVENS,

Commanding, Second Brigade, E. C.

Sir:—I have the pleasure of reporting the complete success of our enterprise without the loss of a single man. I will give the details this evening, for the present will content myself with saying that all my arrangements made, I crossed with one hundred and fifty men at five o'clock, and entered the fort on a double quick, the enemy firing two shots as we approached, and then retreating so precipitately as to leave behind a large Colt's revolver and a double barreled shot gun. I examined the work carefully and found the fort more delapidated than I supposed, and nothing new in it but a picket cover in which a fire was blazing, and which gleaming through the crevices, undoubtedly created upon the mind of Captain Parker, the impression of shifting lights and work being done in the fort at night. Destroying the picket house and leaving behind our card in the following communication, which I had previously prepared:

"TO THE CONFEDERATE FORCES:—We have visited you this morning for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of our fort, which we have somewhat neglected since January 1st. Hoping you may be pleased to reciprocate, and pledging ourselves to give you a warm reception.

We are,

UNITED STATES FORCES."

We embarked and proceeded toward Seabrook, touched at Stewarts, the house we shelled the other day. The enemy's pickets leaving just in time to avoid capture. We fired the house and all the out-houses, then made for Seabrook where we arrived well satisfied with our morning's adventures, and hoping you will approve of our acts,

I am with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

HEAD-QUARTERS, ADVANCE POSTS.

GREY'S HILL, April 1st 1862.

CAPT. STEVENS,

A. A. Gen'l, Second Brigade.

Sir:—In pursuance of a desire expressed by the General to be acquainted with the condition of things in the fort at Port Royal Ferry, and particularly to learn whether the rebels had mounted, or were preparing to mount cannon there. I determined to cross with a force sufficient to overcome the resistance the enemy was expected to make, to penetrate into the fort and either to destroy or bring off the guns which it was thought the enemy might have placed in position there.

To avoid giving them any intimation of the project, I had the flats brought up from Seabrook (by Captain Bolenins) at high tide last night, and being enabled to keep close to our shore. I believe they were brought to the ferry and there moored without the observation of the enemy. Fifteen men from Company "A," armed with Springfield rifles, were detailed to skirmish as far as the nature of the ground would permit, and to draw the enemy's fire. Fifty men of Captain Parker's command, led by himself, formed the attacking party; and fifty men from these head-quarters, under Captains Herman and Telford, constituted the support. Fifty, from Camp Stevens, under Lieutenant Huntzinger, composed the reserve, who were ordered to draw up in company line along the causeway, intermediate between the ferry and the fort, to cover our retreat, and to this end, a section of Hamilton's Battery, under Lieutenant Gittings, had taken position along the bank of the river, to the left of the ferry, screened from observation. Captain Elliott was instructed to take position at the beginning of the causeway, and as soon as could do so without danger from the enemy's Artillery to advance his command to the ferry, in order to make as great a show of strength as possible.

At five o'clock precisely, the movement began. I crossed with the first boat containing the skirmishers and Captain Parker's Company, the other boats following up. The skirmishers immediately advanced upon the fort, and were closely followed by Captain Parker's Company, moving at a double quick. Captain Herman's command following at the same gait. The reserve had just crossed when the skirmishers entered the fort, the enemy retiring as I described in my report of this morning.

The conduct of the troops engaged in this affair gave me much satisfaction, and impressed me with the belief, that had the enemy resisted they would have carried out my instructions and taken the fort at all hazards. A determined resistance was calculated upon in the arrangements of my plans, and it was with pleasure, therefore, that I received from you the appraisal that four Companies of the Highlanders, under Captain Elliott, were placed under my command as a reserve, as I had withdrawn from my command all I could spare without sensibly weakening the different posts.

I am with respect,

Yours truly,

(Signed,)

Lieut. Col. Commanding.

HEAD-QUARTERS, SECOND BRIGADE, E. C.
BEAUFORT, S. C., April 1st, 1862.

LIEUT. COL. BRENHOLTZ,

Sir:—Your report is just received, and the General says is eminently satisfactory. He directs that Lieutenant Gettings, with his Battery, return to Beaufort to-day and report to Captain Hamilton.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

HAZARD STEVENS,

Capt. & A. A. G.

Colonel Christ, having been ordered to move upon the main land and burn the railroad bridge at Pocotaligo, proceeded on the 29th of May, 1862, to carry out his instructions, but with what success, will appear from the following official report:

BEAUFORT, S. C., May 30th, 1862.

CAPT. HAZARD STEVENS,

A. A. G.

Sir:—In pursuance to order, I left Beaufort at 10½ o'clock on the evening of the 28th, with a portion of my regiment, one company of the Eighth Michigan Volunteers, (Captain Doyle); and one company of the Seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, (Captain Elliott.) Numbering in all about six hundred men, and proceeded to Port Royal Ferry. We succeeded in getting on the main land by day light (29th), and immediately took up my line of march for Pocotaligo, via Gardner's Corner. About two miles from the ferry, we commenced driving in the enemy's pickets, and did so three times, before we reached Gardner's Corner. At this point, I left Company "E," (Lieutenant Lantz commanding), and at this point also, Major Higginson, (First Massachusetts Cavalry) reported to me with eighty men and horses. I again took up my line of march for Pocotaligo, via the Shelden road, and save the driving in of the enemy's pickets several times, which caused us considerable delay, we reached Pocotaligo without further interruption. Here the enemy had chosen a most favorable position, and here we suffered the casualties (which I will mention hereafter), in a successful effort to dislodge him. As you reached Pocotaligo, you do so over a causeway about a quarter of a mile in length, flanked on either side by a marsh and through which passes a stream. (About eighty yards from the end of the causeway), over this stream was a bridge, about fifteen feet wide, which the enemy had so far destroyed as to make it impassable, save, by passing over the string pieces, (about six inches wide). On the opposite side of the march from Pocotaligo there is a narrow strip of wood. Through this we skirmished and then ascertained that the enemy was posted under cover of trees and ditches, within good rifle range on either side of the causeway. Some smart firing now ensued with little effect on either side. It, however, became evident, that in order to dislodge the enemy, we must have nearer range for our arms. The lamented Captain Parker volunteered to take his company across the stream, on the string pieces, and let them drop into a ditch on our right, where they would partially be under cover. This movement was successful. After some considerable time, I succeeded in passing about three hundred men, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, who gradually approached the opposite side of the marsh, and succeeded in dislodging the enemy on our right, which was followed by a charge on the left, when the enemy commenced a rapid retreat to the wood. As soon as it could be done, I had the bridge relaid and immediately ordered the Cavalry in pursuit; but the enemy having taken refuge in a wood where Cavalry could not operate successfully, I had to pursue him with Infantry; but, unfortunately, the men were so jaded and worn out with their long march (of some 24 miles), that they could not pursue him as rapidly as he retreated. At this time, Lieutenant Cannon, with a section of the Conn-Battery, reported himself, having just arrived on the ground. In my judgment, if the Artillery had been on the ground when the action commenced, we could have dislodged the enemy in a very short time, and proceeded to accomplish the object of the expedition; but the action itself lasted nearly two hours, and by the time I could recall the companies in pursuit of the retreating enemy, and again get ready to move, more than three hours had elapsed, besides the men had so much reduced their ammunition, that I was not willing to risk another engagement, which I had every reason to believe, awaited me at the railroad, to where the enemy had retreated, and as I had been informed by the negroes, where they were sure to meet reinforcements from McPhersonville and Grahamsville. And subsequent information has proven that I was correct, and that I would have had to encounter an overwhelming force of Infantry reinforcements, from Grahamsville, with three pieces of Artillery.

In view of the positive orders I had received to retreat to Port Royal Island during the night, and to avoid, if possible, bringing on a general engagement, and with reduced ammunition, I deemed it prudent to retire, and accordingly arrived at Port Royal Ferry at eleven o'clock P. M.

Small detachments of the enemy's Cavalry followed us as far as Gardner's Corner, where the outer pickets of Company "E" repulsed them by unhorseing two or three of their number. At Gardner's Corner, I met a detachment of the Eighth Michigan Volunteers, under Lieutenant Colonel Graves, and a detachment of the Seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, under command of Captain Moore, who had been ordered out as a reserve.

As soon as we arrived at the ferry, I immediately commenced to cross over, and by three o'clock (this morning), the entire force was on this side the Coosaw River.

Our loss during the engagement was two killed and nine wounded, for details of which I respectfully refer you to the accompanying report of Doctor Siemon, (Regiment Surgeon). What the enemy's loss is I am unable to say, but from all I can learn it has been much greater than ours. We captured two prisoners, one of which I have already sent to head-quarters; and the other is in the Hospital wounded. It is also difficult to state the force of the enemy, but it could not have been less than from six to eight hundred. There were six companies of Mounted Riflemen, besides Infantry, among which were a considerable number of colored men.

Among the killed is Captain Chas. H. Parker, Company "H," Fiftieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, who fell while gallantly cheering his men to duty.

I cannot speak too highly of the good conduct of both officers and men under my command, they proved themselves soldiers, not only in name, but in deed.

I gratefully acknowledge the assistance of Colonel Brenholtz, Major Overton and Adjutant Rodgers, of the Fiftieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers; Major Higginsin, of the First Massachusetts Cavalry; and of Lieutenant Lyons, Aid de Camp to General Stevens, all of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed,)

B. C. CHRIST,

Col., 50th Regt., P. V.

CASUALTIES OF THE ENGAGEMENT.

Lieutenant Henry S. Rush, of Company "B," was wounded by the accidental discharge of his own revolver.

During the burial ceremony of Captain Chas. Parker, General Isaac I. Stevens took occasion to compliment the regiment for its heroic conduct during the engagement.

Scouting parties were frequently sent across the Coosaw River to destroy rebel property and ascertain the enemy's strength, which often resulted in daring exploits. On the 3d of February, 1862, Seth Milnus, of Company "D," was wounded during one of these reconnoissances.

May 31st, 1862, all the troops were sent to the Edisto, except the Fiftieth Regiment, one company of Cavalry, and one section of Artillery, who were left under the command of Colonel B. C. Christ to guard the island.

Everything went along very nicely until the morning of June 7th, when the enemy made an attack on our picket posts along the Coosaw River. A cavalryman stationed at the reserve head-quarters, dashed into town reporting to Colonel Christ that the enemy had crossed the river in force, captured our pickets and were advancing toward the town. Every civilian and available negro was now ordered out to throw up temporary earthworks, about half a mile beyond the town on the Shell road, while the few troops which had been left in camp were hurried to the front. To add to the excitement, the following men were brought in wounded:

Douglass Towner, Henry Scott, Simon Russel, of Company "G," and Harrison Fry, of Company "H," who were on picket at the ferry, where the enemy made a slight effort to cross. By three o'clock in the afternoon, the troops returned to camp without having seen the enemy.

Again on the morning of June 21st, the enemy endeavored to capture our picket stationed on the point near the Brick Yard, on the Coosaw River. This point extended quite a distance out into the water, and afforded an attacking party every opportunity to get in the rear of the picket and thus cut off retreat. Here three men were stationed, and in endeavoring to make their way back to the reserve, Christian Hartman, of Company "E," fell pierced by three rebel bayonets. The rebels having killed Hartman, hurried back to their boats and recrossed the river beyond the reach of our rifle balls.

Lieutenant B. R. Lyons, of Company "D," having been detailed on General I. I. Stevens' Staff, accompanied the General to the Edisto River, and during the engagement on James Island was wounded.

CHAPTER III.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

July 10th, 1862, the regiment left its pleasant camp at Beaufort, South Carolina, and proceeded north, arriving at Newport News, Va., on the 12th, where it encamped, and was assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps. Its Colonel, B. C. Christ, having been appointed Brigade Commander.

Company and regimental drills were constantly kept up until the 28th, when it was put on board the U. S. Transport Merrimac, and conveyed to Aquia Creek, Va., where it arrived on the 30th. Taking cars immediately for Falmouth, here it encamped until August 2d, when it was transferred to the opposite side of the river, and encamped on St. Mary's Heights.

On the 13th, it broke camp north of Fredericksburg, at five o'clock in the morning, marched through the town and crossed the Rappahannock below the railroad, and filed left up the river through the old town of Falmouth, and on to Culpepper Court House; thence to Raccoon Ford on the Rapidan, where we laid until Sunday night, (the 17th,) then very quickly pulled out and fell back to the Rappahannock River.

Every day now seemed to have some slight skirmish in store for our forces, many of which the regiment participated in. The duties performed by the regiment were arduous, especially so at Kelly's Ford on the Rappahannock, where Companies "D" and "H" were cut off, and at one time entirely surrounded by the enemy, however, through the careful management of Captain G. Z. Dimock, who commanded the detachment, they succeeded in regaining our lines and joined the regiment after nearly a week's absence.

As the regiment passed Manassas Junction, on the 28th of August, every man seemed to feel, as he looked upon the forms of the dead rebels laying here and there, that the time for action had come. Passing along one of the elevations adjacent to Bull Run, the contest at Gainesville could be distinctly seen. The roar of musketry, together with the flash of fire from the cannon's mouth, made impressions that can never be erased from the memory of those beholding the scene.

Looking down upon the contest going on in the valley, and realizing that in a few hours at most the regiment would have to take part, seemed to fire every heart with a patriotism that knew no danger. Entering the engagement with the Drum Corps playing the tune, "The Red, White and Blue," the men took up the words and sang it with a heartiness that seemed to steel every heart, and strengthen every nerve for the conflict.

The day ended with the following casualties:

Killed:

Jerry Boles, Corporal, Company K.

Wounded:

Ira A. Tompkins, Private, Company G.

August 29th, the regiment again entered the battle. The contest being severe, the regiment lost:

A. P. Hill, thus describes the fight towards evening: "The evident intention of the enemy was to turn our left, and overwhelm Jackson's Corps before Longstreet came up; and to accomplish this, the most persistent and furious onsets were made by column after column of Infantry, accompanied by numerous batteries of Artillery. The enemy prepared for a last and determined attempt. Their serried masses, overwhelming superiority of numbers, and bold bearing made the chance of victory tremble in the balance." (The troops immediately in front of Hill's Division, of Jackson's Corps, being Hooker, Kearney and Reno. The Fiftieth composed part of Reno's command.

August 30th, the regiment was temporarily attached to Schurz Division, of Siegel Corps.

Jackson says of the engagement, this day: "About four o'clock, the Federal Infantry moved from under the cover of the wood, and advanced in several lines, first engaging the right; but soon extending the attack to the centre and left. In a few moments our entire line was engaged in a fierce and sanguinary struggle with the enemy. As one line was repulsed, another took its place, and pressed forward as if determined, by force of numbers and fury of assault, to drive us from our positions. So impetuous and well sustained were these onsets as to induce me to send to the Commanding General for re-enforcements."

Outnumbered and outflanked, Reno and Heitelman were falling back before the fierce onsets of Jackson's advance, hence at a late hour on the evening of the 30th, the regiment marched from the field with as much composure as from a drill ground.

Its losses during this day's engagement, were:

On the 31st, a heavy storm set in; but Jackson was pushed forward toward Fairfax to turn the Union right, and Pope sent McDowell, Heintzelman and Reno in that direction, intending to attack on the morning of the 2d of September. But the heads of the two forces came in contact just before dark on the 1st, at Ox Hill, near Chantilly. Stevens' Brigade, of Reno's Corps, being in the advance, was first attacked. The Fiftieth Regiment, being part of Stevens' Brigade, was one of the first regiments engaged.

During the engagement, rain descended in a deluge, the thunder was deafening, the lightning was blinding, yet these were surpassed by the more destructive fury and vengeance of the human combatants.

The regiment lost during this engagement.

After the engagement at Chantilly, it proceeded with the other troops, through the mud knee deep, to Fairfax Court House, where it arrived about four o'clock in the morning of the 2nd. Resting here until daylight, when the line of march was again taken up, arriving at Alexandria about four P. M., where it rested for a few days and then proceeded to Washington City.

During the different engagements from the time the regiment left Culpepper, it acted with great coolness, and invariably drove the enemy at every point. When other regiments went rushing to the rear pell mell, it stood fast until marched off by its Commander. General Burnside's, in his report of the engagement at Chantilly, speaks of General I. I. Stevens' Brigade in the most flattering terms.

Many interesting scenes and incidents occurred during the campaign just ended.

On the first morning after leaving camp at Fredericksburg, the regiment halted in a stubble field with the wheat shocks still unstacked. The boys, in order to quicken their fires for boiling their coffee, appropriated the sheaves of wheat. General Stevens was so much provoked at this destruction of private property, that he ordered Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz under arrest, for allowing the boys to do so wicked a thing. The General thought that the rebellion could be put down without hurting the rebels, had he lived another year he would have learned better.

The battle field often presents incidents ridiculous as well as sublime. At Bull Run, while the fight was most severed own along the old railroad, two men from "A," forgetting the danger of rebel bullets, laid down their muskets and settled a little difficulty by pummeling each other with their fists.

CHAPTER IV.

MARYLAND CAMPAIGN.

After arriving at Washington, the Fiftieth Regiment was placed in the First Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, with Colonel Christ, Commanding the Brigade.

General O. B. Wilcox, Commanding the Division, General J. L. Reno, Commanding the Corps, and A. E. Burnside, Commanding the right wing of the Army of the Potomac.

On the 3d of September, with the Ninth Corps, the Regiment moved out on the Seventh Street Road and encamped just outside of the line of the defences of Washington, where it remained for several days, and then with the right wing of the Army of the Potomac, marched on to Frederick City and took active part in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam.

One of the first scenes recalled by the battle of South Mountain, Md., (September 14th, 1862,) is the knapsacks of the "Kanawha Division" (Coxe's,) strewn along the side of the road just before entering Frederick City, Md., where they had been cast aside, as they were ordered "Forward, double-quick" to enter the fight. Then marching down the turnpike toward the mountain, with now and again a rebel shell bursting immediately overhead, as much as to say "Come on Yanks, we are ready for you." Then filing to the left we ascend the mountain slope, and as each man intuitively realizes the situation, he examines his musket, and sends home a cartridge to be ready for action.

The next thing, amid the shrieking of the bursting shells, there comes rushing down the mountain side a confused mass of men, with blanched faces, terror depicted upon their very countenances, nothing could stop them. Old soldiers only know how trying it is to be marched into a place which others have tried to hold, and could not, especially when the party driven out are known to be brave and true; and by deeds of heroism and valor, in former engagements had acquired a reputation to be envied.

The Fiftieth Regiment never refused to go where it was ordered, hence through beholding the Eighth Michigan in utter rout, and though it seemed like marching into the very jaws of death, it took the position pointed out by General Wilcox, and held it, notwithstanding all the time subjected to that most terribly dreaded fire—an enfilading artillery fire, and whilst undergoing that trying ordeal, it seemed as though the men were bound one to the other, arm to arm, and shoulder to shoulder.

Looking to the left, little coils of smoke arising indicated that the contents of the rebel artillery were starting on their mission of intended destruction, as one man, the regiment fell prostrate upon the ground, only to rise up again with the same mechanical precision when the missile had passed by, and so time and again the action was repeated. It was the cool self-possession of the regiment and its uniformity of action that saved it from annihilation.

The conduct of the Fiftieth on this occasion may have been equaled by other regiments, but surpassed by none. It stood there enduring a galling artillery fire, without being able to return a shot. It simply stood as a mark for the enemy's cannon, drawing and attracting their fire, and not moving from its position until other parts of the division had formed and charged upon the battery and captured it. This action was appreciated and recognized by General Wilcox, then and there, and by his order was sent to a position considered equally hazardous—that of protecting the left flank of the army. In this new and responsible position it showed too that it was worthy of the trust confided to it. The Commander of the Ten Pound Battery, sent with the Fiftieth to defend the flank, was not disposed to be idle while the battle was going on, so he trained one of his pieces, as he thought in about the right direction, and occasionally sent his compliments to the rebels in the shape of a ten-pound shell, the sequel showed that he had judged rightly, for about the middle of the afternoon a special delegation of two or three thousand rebels formed for the purpose of capturing the battery and thus retaliate for the damage done them. They doubtless started upon their undertaking confident of success, but they were doomed to disappointment, for that battery was supported by, and entrusted to the care of a regiment that was not to be caught napping. One of the skirmishers, (Private Geo. Bogardus,) of Company "H," looking down along the rows of standing corn, saw a rebel laying down behind the fence on the far side of the corn field. Information of this fact was at once communicated to the Battery Commander and Major Overton. In less than half an hour after this, the enemy could be distinctly seen quietly marching into position on the other side of the corn field. Realizing that the enemy were forming for a charge, word was again quickly sent to the Battery Commander, who dispatched an orderly on horse to urge forward, with all possible dispatch, reinforcements, and in the meantime training his four guns, opened upon the corn field. Major Overton had barely time to swing the Fiftieth into line to receive the charge, when the rebel yell rang out upon the air. Just at this moment the head of the column of reinforcements arrived, and before they had proper time to form into line the rebels were charging upon the battery. The charge was a determined one, but the triple charges of grape and canister from those four guns and a terrific fire from the infantry, at short range sent the rebel column precipitately from the field, leaving several hundred dead and wounded behind.

Judging by the loss sustained by the regiment in the engagement of September 14th, (South Mountain,) it might be supposed that it did very little service. Not a single man was killed, and only two wounded, viz: Privates—Henry Kline, of Company "E," and Partial Kennedy, of Company "K."

But the efficiency or hard work which a regiment has done is not always to be judged of by the loss it sustained. If an object can be attained, or a position regained without the loss of a man, it is all the more creditable to those who accomplished it.

Col. Overton says: "When under Cox we were in this position:

The movements of the rebels toward our left was reported to me by the skirmishers in our immediate front, then by those at the 45° angle, and then by those in front of the flankers. I put the regiment in the rear of the battery and reported to Cox what I had done. He sent me word that a regiment was coming to our assistance, and not to draw the enemy's fire if I could avoid it till our support arrived. In the meantime the rebel brigade lay in our front, not knowing that they were discovered. As soon as we were ready, by my orders, the skirmishers fired and fell back to the regiment.

General Cox said to me that day that we had the most important position in the army, and afterwards highly complimented the regiment for its service.

I was present when a staff officer came to Wilcox, saying Cox was hard pressed and wanted two regiments immediately. Wilcox turned to me and said, take the Fiftieth over, it is better than two ordinary regiments."

In the afternoon of the 15th, the regiment, with other troops of the Ninth Corps, after having assisted in burying the dead, were marched over what is known as the Rohrersville and Sharpsburg Road toward the Antietam Creek. On the night of the 16th it was placed on picket, occupying a position on the extreme left front, and on the morning of the 17th had a fine view of the battle, though nearly four miles away. Returning to the brigade during the morning, it crossed the stone bridge, (Burnside's Bridge) and filed to the right, marching to the crest of the hill where it formed ready for action. Prostrated upon the ground at the crest of the hill, we endured a severe fire from the enemy's artillery. In about half an hour after forming, the command forward was given, though tired and exhausted, having been on picket duty all night, it entered the fight with the greatest alacrity and enthusiasm, charging upon and driving the enemy from his position. The time engaged was short, but during that time its loss was:

Chaplain Meredith says: "It was my painful duty to be Captain Ingham's attendant during his last moments. His last audible words were, "Attention, Company! Aim, Fire!" and then his brave soul passed into the Great Beyond, where battle scenes are unknown."

The regiment assisted, on the 18th, in burying the dead and caring for the wounded. On the 19th it marched to the Antietam Iron Works, where it encamped for a short time, then passing into Pleasant Valley, it was transferred to the Second Brigade, First Division of the Ninth Army Corps, and sent to Point of Rocks, Md., where it did picket duty for about two weeks. During our stay at Point of Rocks we feasted on fresh fish, which were caught in great abundance.

On the 28th of October, 1862, Col. Brenholtz says, in a letter to his wife: "We have only four Captains with the regiment; some companies are without commission office. The effective strength of the regiment is very small, some companies cannot raise more than fifteen men. The entire number being less than three hundred men.

General McClellan having decided to move his army across the Potomac, and either compel the enemy to give battle near Winchester or retreat toward Richmond. On the 29th of October, 1862, the regiment forded the river at Point of Rocks. Notwithstanding, the water was about three feet deep, and the weather cold and disagreeable, we waded the water. Passing on to Waterford, Va., we halted for a few days, then proceeded to Gaskins' Mills, where another short halt was made. Owing to some trouble with the arrangements for transporting the commissary stores, provisions ran short, hence this place was named "Camp Starvation." After passing through Ricketstown, Salem, White Sulphur Springs and Rappahannock Station, the regiment was placed on duty as rear guard of the army, and continued in that position until it arrived at Falmouth.

General Burnside having been placed in command of the Army of the Potomac, concentrated his forces in front of Fredericksburg, preparatory to attacking the enemy at that point, hence on the 13th of December we crossed the Pontoon Bridge immediately in front of Fredericksburg, and were placed on the extreme left of the centre division. In our immediate front very little fighting was done.

The regiment, however, did good service, as the connecting link between the left wing and centre of the army, ready to execute any order that might be issued by the Commander.

On the night of the 15th it was withdrawn to the opposite side of the river, and went back to its former camping ground.

The only casualty reported, was the wounding of Milo Spencer, private, of Company "D."

February 13th, 1863, we were sent to Newport News, Va., via Aquia Creek. While at Newport News, through the efforts of Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz, each man was provided with a short jacket, light blue pantaloons and white gloves. Orders were then issued forbidding any one to appear on dress parade without his full uniform, including white gloves and blacked shoes. At this time there was no finer looking or better drilled regiment in the corps. Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz felt proud of his regiment, and took great pains to have it appear to good advantage on all public occasions, hence on the 17th of March he issued an order forbidding any one to appear on either Regimental or Brigade drill without his new suit of clothing on. During the month spent at Newport News the time was almost constantly employed in drilling, during which the regiment attracted much attention by its precision and uniformity in executing the commands.

March 22d, 1863, it was put on board the steamboat "Coroner," preparatory to a new scene of action.

CHAPTER V.

DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO.

On the 22d of March, 1863, we were sent with the Ninth Corps to the Department of Ohio, via Baltimore, Md., and Parkersburg, Va., arriving at Covington, Ky., early in the morning of the 27th. The trip from Newport News to Baltimore being by boat, thence to Parkersburg by rail, then down the Ohio to Cincinnati. All along the route the troops were treated very kindly. Hot coffee and fresh bread were issued to the regiment at Cumberland, Md., and Grafton, Va. After taking dinner at Cincinnati on the 27th, we proceeded to Nicholasville, Ky., where we arrived next morning, and then marched to Camp Dick Robinson, where we encamped until April 12th, when we moved to Stanford, here we remained until the 30th, and then moved to Usterville. May 5th we crossed the mountains and then encamped near Summerset.

One remarkable fact was greatly appreciated by the regiment. The venders of butter, eggs, pies, &c., were either honest or had not learned the trick of charging soldiers extra high prices for everything. In comparison to the custom in Washington, Baltimore and other points passed in its travels, the people seemed to have souls, except in the item of pies. The prices were sufficiently low to induce the fortunate possessor of cash to buy, the want of lard, however, made their pies exceedingly tough. Eggs and chickens were offered in great abundance, at reasonable prices.

June 4th we broke camp at Summerset and marched back to Nicholasville, where we took cars and proceeded to Cincinnati, Ohio, where we arrived on the 8th, thence were sent to Vicksburg, Mississippi. The route taken was by rail from Cincinnati to Cairo, thence by boat down the Mississippi River to the Yazoo, then up the Yazoo to Haines' Bluff.

When near Napolian, Ark., a party of rebels opened fire upon the vessel, fortunately no one was hurt. Landing at Haines' Bluff the regiment encamped about two miles from the wharf.

General Joseph E. Johnston had been assigned by the rebel authorities to the work of raising the siege of Vicksburg, by an attack upon Grant's rear. To prevent this, the Ninth Corps, with other troops, were posted at Haines' Bluff. The duty was more of observation than of direct contact with the enemy, hence our forces had a fortnight of comparative quiet. Immediately after the surrender of Vicksburg, (July 4th, 1863,) General Sherman, with the Ninth Army Corps and other troops, started in pursuit of Johnston. The regiment left camp toward night-fall on the 4th, and moved out towards the Big Black River. On the 10th the corps came in contact with the enemy near Jackson. The Fiftieth and Forty-sixth New York occupied a position on the Canton road. The enemy's defences consisted of a line of earth-work combined with the natural strength of their position, enabled them to make a decided resistance to any attempt which we might make to dislodge them. General Sherman finding the enemy so strongly posted, decided to await the arrival of heavier artillery and supplies of ammunition. The next few days the two armies lay watching each other. The weather being excessively hot, we got what shelter we could from the burning rays of the sun, in the woods that bordered our position. "On the 16th a reconnoissance was ordered, for the purpose of developing the enemy's position and his forces. A gallant advance was made, during which the enemy's formidable batteries made free use of shrapnel, canister and shell upon our troops, during which Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz fell mortally wounded."* The esteem in which he was held by the regiment, was feelingly manifested in what subsequently took place. Johnston having evacuated Jackson, Sherman destroyed about fifteen miles of railroad and a vast amount of other property, and then decided to return with his army to the Big Black River; but Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz's wound was of such a serious nature that the Medical Director decided it would not do to place him in an ambulance. He might survive if carefully carried on a stretcher upon the shoulders of four men. Volunteers were called for and at once obtained, and the Lieutenant Colonel was carried in that way more than forty miles, to the rear of Vicksburg, but subsequently died while going up the Ohio River. History seldom records incidents of greater love for a superior officer, than was exhibited by the volunteer party, who carried and attended Lieutenant Colonel Brenholtz from Jackson to Milldale. Thus illustrating the fact, that, though surrounded with the horrible realities of war, men do not necessarily lose the sense of sympathy and love for their suffering comrades.

The regiment arrived at its old camping ground at Milldale, on the 23d of July, where it remained until August 10th, when we marched to Haines' Bluff and embarked on the South Wester, bound for Cairo, Illinois, where we arrived on the 16th. Taking cars we proceeded to Crab Orchard, Kentucky, via Cincinnati, Ohio, and Nicholasville, Kentucky.

The campaign in Mississippi was especially severe in its effects upon officers and men. The excessive heat, the malaria that settled like a pall of death around the camps upon the Yazoo River, the scarcity of water and its bad quality, and the forced marches told fearfully upon all. All the accounts of the movements agree in their statements respecting the amount of disease and mortality which accompanied it. The hardships, which all were obliged to endure, were excessive. Water, which the horses refused to drink, the men were obliged to use in making coffee. Fevers, congestive chills, diarrhœa, and other diseases attacked the troops. Many sank down upon the roadside, and died from sun-stroke and sheer exhaustion.

During the pursuit of Johnston to Jackson, orders had been issued by the Commanding General, that the troops should subsist, principally, from the country through which they had passed, hence foraging parties were sent out, who succeeded in bringing in large numbers of sheep, oxen, hams, &c. These foragers were in constant danger of attack by the rebel Guerilla, who seemed to be lurking everywhere, and whenever an opportunity offered audacious dashes would be made upon our trains. Captain Dimock, acting as Brigade Quarter Master, was pursued one day and driven almost into camp. On another occasion the regimental commissary team being out gathering fresh corn, was surrounded and would in all probability have been captured, but for a squad of our cavalry dashing up and driving the rebels away.

HEAD-QUARTERS, FIRST DIV., 16TH ARMY CORPS.
JACKSON, MISS., July 20th, 1863.

MAJ. GEN'L JOHN G. PARKE,
Commanding Ninth Army Corps.

Sir:—Your order transferring our Division to the Sixteenth Army Corps is just received. Permit me, in behalf of the Division I command, to tender to you our thanks for your uniform kindness to us, and for the interest you have manifested in our welfare during our temporary assignment to duty with your Corps.

I am happy to assure you that the opportunity afforded us to witness the conduct of the eastern troops of your command has convinced us that they possess valor and discipline, which we may well emulate. Longer associations would we doubt not, have matured and strengthened the friendship so auspiciously begun. Our best wishes for your welfare and success will constantly attend you.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

SPECIAL ORDERS, }
No. 207. }

(Extract.) In returning the Ninth Corps to its former command, it is with pleasure that the General Commanding acknowledges its valuable services in the campaign just closed. Arriving at Vicksburg, opportunely taking position to hold at bay, Johnston's Army then threatening the forces investing the city, it was ready and eager to assume the aggressive at any moment. After the fall of Vicksburg it formed a part of the army, which drove Johnston from his position near the Big Black River into his entrenchments at Jackson, and after a siege of eight days, compelled him to fly in disorder from the Mississippi Valley.

The endurance, valor and general good conduct of the Ninth Corps are admired by all, and its valuable co-operation in achieving the final triumph of the campaign is gratefully acknowledged by the Army of the Tennessee.

Maj. General Parke will cause the different Regiments and Batteries of his Command to inscribe upon their banners and guidions, "Vicksburg and Jackson."

CHAPTER VI.

EAST TENNESSEE CAMPAIGN.

September 10th, 1863, the regiment, with the Ninth Army Corps, took up the line of march for Knoxville, Tennessee, via Cumberland Gap. Less than one hundred men and officers were all that were fit for duty. Arriving at Knoxville on the 26th, we all thought that we would have a resting spell, but in this we were disappointed, for we had been there scarcely a week, when we were ordered to Blue Springs as a supporting force to a portion of the Twenty-third Army Corps. The enemy had taken up a strong position, and about four thousand of the Twenty-third Army Corps, under Colonel Carter, tried to drive them for about eight hours, and finally reported to General Burnside that they could not dislodge them. The General ordered them to make way for our Division, (numbering less than three thousand men,) and we went at them with a will, and drove them right under their batteries, and could we have had thirty minutes more daylight, we would have captured at least half their force. The division won quite a reputation in the affair, and were complimented in general order. The regiment had two men wounded in this engagement:

Patrick McCollough, Private, Company "C," and George Devinney, Musician, Company "H." The latter died from the effect of his wound. After returning from Blue Springs we proceeded to London, and then falling back to Lenior Station, we erected winter quarters and expected a comfortable time.

On the 14th of November, General Longstreet, with a force of twenty thousand men, crossed the Tennessee River at Hough's Ferry, when we were hurried to the front on the extreme right, with orders to push at once for the ferry, on the supposition that the enemy had re-crossed the river. But pushing to the ferry on a dark night through a dense wood occupied by the enemy, was no easy task. After pushing out beyond our advance pickets about one hundred yards, we threw out skirmishers to cover our front, and then deployed in line of battle. The skirmishers were then ordered to move forward cautiously, and if challenged or fired upon, not to reply, but to seek cover, and if possible, hold their position. We had not moved over one hundred yards, when the whole line was almost simultaneously challenged, of course we came to a halt. Orders having been received not to attack, but hold our position until daylight, which we did. Our skirmishers and the enemy's were not over forty yards apart. They were so close that a rebel lieutenant and several men took our line for theirs, and were taken prisoners. During the night it rained and stormed, and, notwithstanding the weather was very cold, we had to do without fires or tents. The regiment was ordered to charge at daylight, but before that time the whole programme was changed for wise and prudential reasons, hence we fell back to Lenior and assisted in holding the enemy in check, during which time we were obliged to burn large quantities of stores, &c., among which were the books and papers of the regiment. It now became a matter of some consequence as to who should reach Campbell Station first, a point where the Kingston Road intersects with the London Road. The race was an exciting one. "Colonel Hartranft, with his division, was only fifteen minutes in advance of the enemy."* Here the decisive battle of the campaign was fought. The enemy more than doubled Burnside's forces, and yet we held them in check for seven hours. The Fiftieth was in the front on the right for four hours, and sustained a heavy artillery fire at short range over half an hour. Colonel Christ says: "A portion of the Twenty-third Corps, on my left broke, but rallied again and came up very nearly to their former line, my men did not waver, although I was obliged to change position three times, in order to prevent a flank movement on the part of the enemy." When we finally retired it was under a combined infantry and artillery fire, over an open plain for about four hundred yards before we could get cover. Mr. Woodbury, in his history of the Ninth Army Corps, says: "The attack commenced about 12 o'clock, by a furious charge upon our right, where Colonel Christ's brigade had been posted. The rebels came on in columns of attack, hoping to crush in our right flank by the momentum of their assault. Our lines wavered a little, Colonel

* Ninth Army Corps.

Christ rapidly changed front, and though his brigade was somewhat attenuated, it could not be broken. The desperate charge of the rebel host were handsomely and successfully repulsed. Never did troops manœuvre so beautifully and with such precision. The conduct of the officers and men was beyond all praise, and the battle of Campbell's Station will always be proudly remembered by those of our troops who were fortunate enough to participate in its scenes."

We arrived at Knoxville after a tedious night march, at three o'clock on the morning of the 17th, having been marching and fighting without sleep from the 14th. We now took a rest until about nine o'clock, when we went into position and commenced digging rifle pits. For the first day or two, work could be done by daylight, but after that every thing had to be done at night. In our immediate front the enemy were within speaking distance, and it was utterly unsafe for any one to show his head above the rifle pits. The greater the danger the more reckless every one seemed to grow. Soon rations were cut down one-half, and then one-fourth. Thus for eighteen days the troops patiently and heroically endured the privations of the siege.

On the 29th of November, at early dawn, the enemy charged on Fort Sanders; the Fiftieth held position just to the right of the fort, a small detail of the regiment was sent to assist the garrison in repelling the charge. The attack was made with great impetuosity, and sustained with inflexible valor, but was repulsed with terrible slaughter. "The anxiety attending the siege was keenly visible on all countenances, but one could plainly discern the determination of holding out to the bitter end. This feeling all possessed; not a man in the trenches but said we would hold our position. All seemed to share our noble commanders idea, "If Grant can destroy Bragg it of no great consequence what becomes of ourselves." Longstreet finding it unsafe for him to remain longer, withdrew his forces during the night of 4th of December.

The casualties of the regiment during the campaign from Hough's Ferry to the raising of the siege of Knoxville, December 5th, are :

Killed:

Emanuel Faust, Private, Co. A, at Campbell Station.
Isaac Feindt,	"	"	"	"	Knoxville, Nov. 22d.

Immediately after the siege was raised, the regiment, with the Ninth Corps followed the enemy as far as Rutledge, then encamped at Blains Cross Roads. Captain O. C. Bosbyshell, of the Forty-eighth Penna., writing to the Miners' Journal, says: "Never were troops called upon to endure greater privations and hardships." Colonel Christ says in a letter to his son, under date of December 24th, 1863: "I assure you we have been roughing it of late, laying out night after night in the rain on the wet ground, sometimes without fire, when it was so cold that it was impossible to sleep. The sufferings endured while at Blaines Cross Roads and on the march over the mountains back to Nicholasville, Ky., were equally as great as those endured by our forefathers at Valley Forge."

Nothing could more fully exemplify the patriotism of the regiment than its re-enlistment, January 1st, 1864, under the circumstances in which it was placed. Having been on short rations since the siege of Knoxville, destitute of clothing, and many barefooted. Over two hundred miles from his base of supplies, in the middle of winter, constantly harrassed by the enemy, neither General Burnside nor the Government could be blamed for this condition of affairs, hence the great question after re-enlistment, was, how to put the men in a condition to march back to Nicholasville, Ky., the snow being about six inches deep and the weather extremely cold. To protect the feet of the shoeless on the homeward march, shoes were made from raw hides, many of these, however, had to be abandoned during the first day's march. The heat from within and the melting snow made them stretch, so as to be almost useless, hence many threw them away, and wrapped their feet with such clothing as could be spared. To add to our distress we were nearly perishing with hunger. The weather, part of the time, was so cold that the thermometer registered zero.

When we arrived at Mount Vernon, Ky., a store was found with a good supply of shoes on hand. Arrangements were made with the proprietor to furnish all the shoes required. After our arrival at Camp Nelson, (at Nicholasville, Ky.,) the regiment was supplied with new clothing, blankets, provisions, &c. When it was drawn up in line preparatory to taking cars for Cincinnati, its appearance had improved wonderfully, each man having donned his new suit. After arriving at Cincinnati, we were quartered in the Fifth Street Market House for several days, waiting for our pay, after which we proceeded to Harrisburg, Pa., where we arrived February 6th. Now for the first time in all our travels by railroad, we were treated to first-class passenger cars (from Pittsburgh, over the Pennsylvania Railroad.) The car furnished for the officers use was a very handsome and comfortable affair. In a few days after our arrival at Harrisburg, each man was given a thirty-day furlough and sent home.

After the regiment arrived at Rutledge, Tennessee, Quartermaster Sergeant John S. Eckel, (acting Quartermaster,) and Commissary Sergeant Lewis Crater were ordered by Colonel Christ to proceed to Buffalo Creek, with instructions to take charge of two mills there, and put the mills to work grinding rebel wheat, and when a wagon load was ground to send it to camp. After having taken possession, Eckel remained at one mill and Crater at the other. When about half a ton of flour had been ground at Eckel's mill, an officer of some Western regiment came along with a squad of men and ordered him away. On refusing to comply, the men were ordered to take possession, and Eckel placed under guard until all the flour ground was loaded on their wagon and taken away

The entire brigade received a portion of the flour secured at the other mill.

On the march from Knoxville to Rutledge, everything in the eatable line was looked upon only to be coveted. Notwithstanding, the troops were terribly in want of food, very little stealing was done. Most of the men had a little money, hence where provisions, &c. were offered at reasonable prices, very few of the men acted dishonestly. As an evidence of the voracious appetites engendered by the siege, five men, connected with the commissary department, purchased three large geese and about half a peck of corn meal. The geese and corn meal were all cooked and eaten at one meal.

The day before Christmas, (Dec. 24th, 1863,) a report reached camp that a supply train had reached Corps headquarters; all were anxiously wishing for the morning, when it was expected that provisions would be issued. Four men from Company "C," however, were impatient and determined to proceed to headquarters, hoping that the sight of "hard tack" might do them good. Though the night was dark and rain falling rapidly, they soon found that the coveted provisions had been placed in a large tent, and a guard placed inside. The guard, however, had laid down and was sound asleep just inside the tent. One of the men stepped over the guard and carried out four boxes of hard bread, which they carried to camp. Company "C" had a good Christmas dinner, the balance of the regiment, however, did not receive anything until late in the evening, hence they had nothing to eat nearly all day.

While crossing the Wild Cat Mountain, on the march from Blains' Cross Roads to Nicholasville, one of the baggage wagons upset, and before it could be gotten up on the road again and loaded, night had set in. The men lay down upon the mountain top, on the frozen ground, and drawing a large tarpaulin over them for protection from the storm. During the night about four inches of snow fell, under which the men slept comfortably.

CHAPTER VII.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

The thirty days furlough having expired on the 8th day of March, we rendezvoused at Camp Curtin until the 20th, when we were sent to Annapolis, Md., by steamboat from Baltimore. Our camping ground at Annapolis was that occupied by the regiment in October, 1861. The regiment having been recruited to the minimum standard and fully organized and drilled, it was assigned to the Second Brigade, Third Division, Ninth Army Corps on the 21st day of April, with Colonel B. C. Christ in command of the brigade. On the 23d of April, the Ninth Corps moved from Annapolis, and on the 25th, it was reviewed by President Lincoln, and then encamped near Alexandria. On the 27th, the line of march was again taken up, and on the 28th, we passed over the old Bull Run battle ground, resting at Warrington Junction on the 29th and 30th. About noon on the 5th of May, we crossed the Rapidan River at Germanna Ford, passing on to the front near the Wilderness Tavern, we formed line of battle a little before three o'clock.

We were heavily engaged on the 6th, and at one time the rebels were around us in the form of a horse shoe, then we were double-quickened to a part of the field where our forces were stampeding. Our presence had the effect of infusing new energy into the disordered and broken ranks. The enemy were driven backward until our ammunition was nearly exhausted, when Lieutenant Colonel Overton sent Sergeant J. V. Kendall back to the Brigade Commander, Colonel B. C. Christ, to ask for a fresh supply of ammunition, but there was none to be had. The request was made the second time, when word was sent back, "Hold your ground at the point of the bayonet." Colonel Overton did hold his ground, but at the cost of seventy men killed and wounded. During the night of the 6th, the regiment lay within fifty yards of the enemy's line. Mr. Woodbury, in his history of the Ninth Corps, says: "Col. Hartmanft having found himself confronted by so strong a force as to make further progress impracticable. He did, however, succeed in maintaining his position close by the enemy's intrenchments, where he was bravely supported by the brigade of Colonel Christ."

Captain S. K. Schwenk, of Company "A," in a letter to the Miners' Journal, a few days after the engagement, says: "The regiment was engaged in the hottest of the fight at the Wilderness, and drove the enemy in good style to his rifle pits, which he was compelled to leave during the night.

Several of the historians—viz: Woodbury, Lossing, Harpers, &c., say that the Ninth Corps did not arrive on the field until the 6th. This may be true of part of the Corps. The Third Division, however, arrived on the field in the afternoon of the 5th.

Captured:

George Lester, Corporal, Company A.

In pursuance to an order given by General Mead to General Burnside, to select two of his best regiments to protect the rear of the army, in moving from the field, the Fiftieth was selected as one of the two, and was closely followed by the enemy's cavalry.

On the 9th of May, while moving along the Fredericksburg Road, it came upon the enemy at Ny River, and was immediately engaged. General Wilcox's (Third) Division drove the enemy across the river.

"Colonel Christ's brigade with Romer's and Twitchell's batteries of artillery, was immediately thrown across the river and posted on a slight eminence about a quarter of a mile beyond." "The brigade was attacked while there by a considerable force of dismounted cavalry and a brigade of infantry, during which the Fiftieth charged up a steep ascent and routed a force of the enemy, greatly their superior in numbers. Mr. Woodbury says: "The Third Division, and especially Colonel Christ's Brigade, won this position in a very creditable manner, but at a cost of one hundred and eighty-eight killed, wounded and missing." Though the loss of the division was comparatively light, that sustained by the Fiftieth was extremely heavy in killed and wounded. The killed are:

During the engagement of May 9th, a most touching incident took place at the hospital. Theodore Warner, of Company "D," having been mortally wounded, was carried by a few of his comrades to the field hospital. His uncle, who was a surgeon of the Twentieth Michigan Regiment, having been called, and examined the wound, announced the fact that life could not continue long, and that in a few hours, at most, death would ensue. With tearful eyes, Theodore replied, "Uncle, tell mother, I died at my post." Soon after death threw its dark pall over his brave soul.

The Fiftieth Regiment, with the Ninth Army Corps, on the 12th of May, 1864, encountered the enemy at Spottsylvania Court House. The Ninth Corps occupied a position immediately on the right of the Fredericksburg Road. In our immediate front was a thick wood, into which we charged when the enemy succeeded in getting upon our flank and rear, then a most desperate hand to hand conflict took place. The bayonet and butt end of the muskets were freely used. Sergeant James Levan, of Company "C," writing to his brother under date of May 21st, 1864, says: "The first I knew of our being surrounded was when I heard some one say, 'Surrender you Yank, its all up with you.' I looked up and saw a terrible big officer swinging his sword over my head. It was now every man for himself, however, I found the captain of Company "B," and the Lieutenant Colonel with some eight or ten men. We had just taken position when Captain Brumm came up with both our flags, both Color Sergeants having been captured and the flags were in the rebels' hands. Captain Brumm deserves great credit for retaking them. Just then General Wilcox saw us there and said, 'Boys, you have done nobly,' and proposed cheers for us." Our loss during the engagement was:

The regiment continued in its entrenchments near Spottsylvania, until the 18th, when it moved (with the Second Brigade, Third Division, Ninth Army Corps) about four miles farther to the left, near the Poe River. Now the real hard work of the campaign began. Almost a continuous line of breastworks were thrown up, from which the troops on the right were withdrawn only to continue the line farther to the left, thus night and day until June 12th, was this work continued. Captain H. A. Lantz, in a letter to his wife, dated June 1st, says: "We are moved from three to five times a day and night, when we throw up breastworks or dig rifle pits, which means work, march and fight, day and night." Though the work required of officers and men was the most arduous, it was performed without a murmur. Notwithstanding, the regiment had lost fully three hundred and thirty men killed, wounded and captured during the month, the very best feeling was exhibited, from the fact that all felt that some progress was being made, and that the end of the rebellion was prospectively drawing near. On the 25th of May the regiment was detailed to do picket duty, along the bank of the North Anna River, when John Reed, of Company "C" was killed, and John Lamont, of Company "B," and John Mackey, Sergeant, of Company "I," were wounded." Next morning the Fiftieth Pennsylvania, Sixtieth Ohio, First, Second and Twentieth Michigan regiments with a battery, were left at Ox Ford, on the north side of the North Anna River, while the balance of the army endeavored to effect a crossing at other points.

On the 1st of June, near Bethesda Church, the rebels made an attack upon our lines, during which Lieutenant William H. Hiney and Corporal George W. Cake, of Company "C" were wounded.

Almost continual skirmishing was kept up on the 1st and 2d of June. The sharp-shooters on both sides were busily employed.

The Ninth Corps having been moved from the centre to the right, bore the brunt of the battle on that part of the field on the third. General Wilcox's (Third) division entered the fight at an early hour, recapturing a line of rifle pits that had been lost the previous night. During this engagement our regiment lost four men killed and seven wounded.

On the 7th of June, Captain Yeager, of Company "B," writing to his mother, says: "It is now one full month since we first met and fought the enemy, we have been under fire every day since the 6th day of May." Picket fighting, skirmishing and shelling were almost continual occurrences. Captain Lantz says: "When ever we think we can lay down for an hour or two, the pickets commence firing at each other, when we must get into our breast-works ready for action. Mr. Woodbury, in reviewing the moments of the five weeks ending with June 12th, says: "Almost every hour witnessed a combat at some point. It is true, the advance was slow, and that every mile was marked with brave blood. Positions which could not be successfully assailed without vast expenditure of human life, were turned by those flank marches in the face of an enemy, which, under the lead of unskillful men, are sure to result disastrously, but which, when made by a man of genius, are as successful as great battles won." In all these operations, the Fiftieth participated in a manner to reflect honor upon its officers and men.

When the flank movement was made in the night from Cold Harbor, trouble was apprehended, and it was supposed the enemy would follow us up. The Fiftieth alone was selected for the rear guard. Fortunately we succeeded in getting out of the rifle pits about nine o'clock p. m., without being discovered, and had no special work to do. It was regarded, however, as an honor to be designated for this important, and as it was then supposed, dangerous place.

On the 15th of June, the regiment, (with the Ninth Corps,) crossed the James River on a pontoon bridge, above Fort Powhatan, and immediately pushed on to Petersburg, where it arrived about noon on the 16th, and formed in line of battle about four o'clock p. m., on the extreme left. Our division, under command of General Wilcox, was formed on the 17th, in three lines. The Twenty-fourth New York dismounted cavalry, Forty-sixth New York Infantry, and the Fiftieth Pennsylvania, formed the third line. We had not advanced far before the first and second lines wavered and gave way to the right and left, the third line, now the first, steadily advanced until a few men of the Forty-sixth New York, and the Fiftieth Pennsylvania, had reached, and were on the enemy's works. The Twenty-fourth having been compelled to fall back, the Forty-sixth and Fiftieth were recalled to the rifle pits, which the skirmishers had occupied. By Colonel Christ's order the Forty-sixth was then withdrawn, and the Fiftieth instructed to hold its position at all hazards, which order was carried out.

Mr Woodbury says: "Colonel Christ's brigade secured a position about midway between our first position of attack and the enemy's line. From this point all efforts of the enemy could not push our tenacious troops. They held on in the midst of a murderous fire, which sadly thinned their ranks, but could not break their spirit." *

Mr. Lossing says: (Vol. III. page 337.) "That night the enemy drove back the Ninth Corps." Mr. Swinton asserts the same fact. (Page 510.) Whatever may have been done on other parts of the line, the Third Division retained the advance position it had gained. The Fiftieth regiment was not moved one step backward.

A correspondent of the New York Herald, writing from the battle field, says: "I cannot help paying a passing compliment to the gallantry and coolness of Colonel Christ, who handled his men in the most admirable manner. His quick eye scoured the battle field, and where the enemy seemed the most determined, and where our men needed assistance, he quickly despatched his regiments. He amply redeemed the fortunes of the Third Division, and it is to be regretted that his success was purchased at the price of a painful wound. A bullet struck him in the side of the head just behind the left ear, and traversed about three inches of his skull."

On the 18th the regiment was divided, Companies A, B and C, were put under the command of Captain Yeager, and placed on duty to protect our flank, hence that part of the regiment was not engaged. Lieutenant Colonel Overton having recovered his health, was in command of the regiment, and led it during the charges of the 17th and 18th. Captain H. A. Lantz, of Company "E," was killed during the second charge, while gallantly leading his men.

The severity of this day's engagement will be appreciated from the fact that our brigade changed commanders three times, and that next day, (19th of June,) it was discovered that only one hundred and fifty men and six officers, (the Lieutenant Colonel, one Captain and four Lieutenants,) were left for duty. The killed and wounded during the two days, were:

The regiment was relieved about two o'clock in the morning of the 19th of June, and marched back a short distance from the front into a wood where we rested until the 21st, when we were assigned to a position on the front line a little to the left of Burnside's mine, from which position we moved to the left flank on the 27th of July. About nine o'clock in the evening of the 29th, we moved to General Warren's Head-quarters, and next morning at three thirty we started to the front to participate in the engagement subsequent to the explosion of the mine.

On the 23d of June, the "Morning Report," stood as follows:

Field Officers for duty, one—E. Overton, Lieutenant Colonel.

Captains for duty, one—George A. Yeager.

1st Lieutenants for duty, two—E. A. Wiest, Company A, and H. Geehter, Company H.

2d Lieutenants for duty, one—Richard Rahn, Company I.

Enlisted men for duty, 178.

That the men might be more conveniently handled, the regiment was divided into four temporary companies. From the 21st of June to the 27th of July, we were constantly under fire, and it was never safe for any one to show his head above the breast-works.

Notwithstanding the utmost caution having been used, the enemy's sharp-shooters killed and wounded quite a number of men, viz.:

Immediately after the explosion of Burnside's mine, on the morning of July 30th, we pushed forward with Wilcox's division, until we reached the crater, but were unable to proceed any farther. After the engagement of the 30th, we remained in the entrenchments immediately in front of the crater, commonly known as the Horse Shoe, until August 7th, when we moved back a short distance to the rear, where we received six months' wages, and then on the 14th took position again on the front line, from there we moved at four o'clock in the morning of August 19th, and immediately marched off toward Ream's Station, on the Welden Railroad. Early in the afternoon we stacked arms near the Yellow Tavern, and were told to take rations. This being the first opportunity offered after leaving the rifle pits in the morning. Rain having fallen during the greater part of the day, and was then falling in torrents. Some of us were soon after wood, while others commenced building fires, and our Regimental Commissary Sergeant issued a ration of salt mackerel, which caused considerable amusement among the men. Instead of putting them in pans, as we did at home, we threw them into holes filled with rain water, to soak. Just at this juncture the long roll was heard, and the cry, "Fall in Men," rang along the line. Without further thought of our mackerel, the line was quickly formed, not however without the realization that the enemy were near. The sharp rattle of musketry, and that old familiar yell, told plainly that the enemy were in our immediate front. Pushing from the wood, in which we had formed, to an open plain, we could plainly see the enemy's lines advancing, we were at once ordered to charge, and the enemy fell back under cover of the wood.

Lossing says: "When the brigades of Wilcox and White came up, Hill hastily withdrew.* However, not without making a desperate effort to hold his ground. The rifle pits built by the Fifth Corps were in the hands of the enemy in our immediate front, and to retake these was now the duty of our troops.

The command "Forward, Double Quick!" having been given, our line wavered for a minute or two, and then like a mighty wave of the ocean, swept every thing before it. The rifle pits were retaken after a desperate hand-to-hand struggle. In our immediate front we found the Forty-seventh Virginia Regiment, the colors of which were captured by Sergeant Charles E. Brown, of Company "C."* The number of prisoners captured by us considerably exceeded our own number.

That night we occupied the pits captured from the enemy. A more uncomfortable night was rare. The pits were full of mud and water, in which we were compelled to lie, in order to keep out of the range of the enemy's constant fire. An incident occurred during the night, which will never be forgotten by the witnesses. Two men from Company "F," (Patrick McManus and Samuel Winger,) were on the vidette line. By some means Winger got beyond the line pretty far, and by a flash of lighting, McManus mistook him for a rebel and fired, hitting him in the forehead. Corporal Losch, who was in command of the line in our front, had Winger carried back of the pits and covered with a gum blanket, thinking him dead, no further attention was paid to him until morning, while the men were eating their breakfast, suddenly the gum blanket raised up, and Winger asked for coffee and hard-tack. The effect was almost like one raising from the grave. After giving him something to eat, he was sent to the hospital, where he afterward died. During the 20th, details of men were sent out to slash timber, and put up a new line of earthworks in our rear, just outside of the wood. During the night of the 20th we leveled down the pits captured from the enemy, and then fell back, leaving Company "C" on the picket line. On the morning of the 21st the enemy advanced driving our line back, and had it not been for the artillery, massed near the Yellow House, opening fire with grape and canister, Company "C" could not have prevented being captured. Our loss during the engagement, was :

Before proceeding further, I cannot refrain from stopping to notice Company "F." Very little has been said of it heretofore, not however, because there were no brave men in its ranks, but because the opportunity for special action had never been presented. From the date of organization in 1861, it was always prompt and energetic in the discharge of its duties, ever ready to follow where its commander might lead. During the campaign of 1864, its losses were proportionately greater than any other company of the regiment. Entering the engagement of May 6th, (the Wilderness,) with about fifty men. Under its brave Commander, Captain G. W. Brumm, (who was wounded June 18th, while leading his men in the charge on the enemy's works,) its number had so diminished that on the 19th of August, but five men were left to enter the battle, three of whom were killed and one wounded, leaving one man, (Patrick McManus.)

From August 22d to September 30th, we were almost constantly employed in building fortifications. On the 25th of August a forced march was made toward Hatches Run, to support the Second Corps.

The engagement, however, had ended before our arrival. During the 26th we returned to our former camping ground. All the men on detached service were now ordered to return to the regiment, and preparations were made to muster out those who had not re-enlisted. On the morning of September 30th, forty-six men, and all the officers except Captain Brumm and Lieutenants Gechter and Foster, were mustered out and returned home; their term of enlistment having expired. After which we proceeded, under command of Captain Brumm, with the Corps toward the Pegram Farm, where we met the enemy. Our brigade occupied a position on the extreme left of the line. The enemy's line overlapped ours, and broke in between the Ninth and Fifth Corps, throwing General Potter's line in confusion, and at the same time their (the enemy's) cavalry charged down on our left flank, creating quite a panic, during which several of the non-commissioned officers of the regiment, aided very materially in restoring order.

Captain Brumm, in his report of this engagement, says: "I cannot pass over the valor displayed by the men of our regiment. Having but a single commissioned officer with them, being out-flanked by the enemy, Sergeant Brown and Commissary Sergeant L. Crater, who rallied quite a number of the men, and holding their position until ordered back by an Aiddecamp. The greater part of the regiment was rallied by myself, and withdrew in good order." Our loss during this engagement, was:

Killed:

The next morning, (October 1st,) we threw up earthworks, and then on the 2d advanced about one mile, when the enemy were found to be again in our front. After dark we fell back a short distance, and immediately began building a line of works to protect our flank and rear. On the 4th, orders were received from Brigade Headquarters, to be ready to move at once. Tents were packed, and the line was about being formed, when the order was countermanded. We then put up our tents in regular order, and during the next fifty-six days rested in comparative idleness.

CHAPTER VIII.

FORT STEDMAN—CAPTURE OF PETERSBURG, &c.

On the 12th of October, one hundred and forty-seven men, principally drafted men and substitutes, were assigned to the regiment. There being only four Commissioned Officers with the regiment, two Lieutenants of the 17th Michigan Regiment, (Knight and Herman,) were assigned by General Wilcox to our regiment, to assist in drilling the recruits. Hospital Steward A. H. Shaffer, who was the only Medical Officer with the regiment after September 30th, was ordered to appear before a Board of Surgeons, then in session at Harrisburg, Pa., hence an Assistant Surgeon of the Eighth Michigan Regiment was temporarily assigned to our regiment. The work of disciplining the recruits was vigorously carried forward in squad, company and regimental drill, until November 29th.

On the 27th of October, while out on a reconnoitering expedition, with the brigade, on the left flank, the enemy opened fire upon us with their artillery, and wounded the following men, viz.:

Alpheus Combs, Private, Company C.
Sam'l Schwenk,	"	"	"
W. C. Rockwell,	"	"	D.
E. A. Wilbur, Sergt.,	"	"	I.

In order to improve the discipline of the regiment, Captain Brumm had all the men who skulked during the reconnoissance of October 27th, exhibited on the drill ground in rather a novel way. Each man had a placard on his back, with the following:

" 'I am a volunteer skirmisher in the rear'. 'I skulked'—'So did I,' and 'I too.'"

Much has been said and written about the unfairness of the election held in the army. There may have been, and no doubt were, instances where injustice was done, and perhaps fraud, but, so far as the writer's experience is concerned, it was conducted quietly and much more fairly than is usual at home. It has also been asserted that a Democrat was not allowed to vote. Of the fifty votes at the poles (of the Fiftieth Regiment,) for Berks, Chester, Lehigh, Lancaster and Northumberland counties, fourteen were for George B. McClellen, the Democratic candidate. About thirty per cent. of the entire vote polled by our regiment, was Democratic.

Orders were issued from Brigade Headquarters on the 10th of November, to build winter quarters, which were just completed when we were moved to Fort McGilvery, (November 29th,) on the banks of the Appomattox, in the immediate front of the city of Petersburg, where we remained until the 24th of March, 1865, when 473 recruits, (principally drafted men,) were assigned to the regiment, and in order to drill them, we were sent to the rear.

On the 27th of November, (1864,) a lot of Second Lieutenant Commissions were received from the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, for a number of the non-commissioned officers. The numerical strength of the different companies was below the standard entitling them to Second Lieutenants, hence the parties receiving the commissions could not be mustered. First Lieutenant Commissions were sometime afterward received. Thus eight Sergeants acted as Lieutenants for about two months, without receiving proper compensation for their services.

January 1st, 1865, the Adjutant's report stood as follows, viz :

1st Lieutenant—Edward A. Wilbur, Company I, “

1st Lieutenant—William K. Taylor, Company K. “

2d Lieutenant—George V. Myer, Company K, prisoner of war since May 12th, 1864.

Through the autumn and winter we were not called upon to do any severe service. We were subjected to constant annoyance from the enemy's sharp-shooters. The picket line in front of the fort, which was guarded by the First Michigan and our own Regiment, was constructed so as to be comparatively free from danger from the sharp-shooters.

The great danger in the fort was from the enemy's mortar guns, especially from one of their forts on the opposite side of the Appomattox River, the guns of which were remarkably well handled. To shelter the occupants of our fort, bombproofs were erected by digging deep trenches in the ground, and covering them over with logs, these were then covered with ground several feet in depth. Whenever the enemy opened fire, all who were off duty had the privilege to go into the Bombproofs.

Notwithstanding all the precautions two men were killed, viz :

Joseph Long, Private, Company C, December 1st, 1864, and John Alwein, Private, Company E, February 3, 1865, and four wounded, viz :

Francis Starwick, Private, Company B, March 9th, 1865.

Rolandus Correll, “ “ C, Dec. 19th, 1864.

Augustus Mellen, 1st Sergt., “ “ Jan. 17th, 1865.

John B. Martz, Private, “ “ Feb. 26th, “

During February and March the artillery duels were almost constant. January 29th a shell exploded in the quarters of Company "F," destroying nearly every tent and several muskets. On another occasion a shell made its way through the roof of the bomb-proof, when about fifty men were in it, when the shell dropped on the floor the scramble to get out was exciting, fortunately the shell did not explode, however, several men were slightly hurt during the panic.

Captain Samuel K. Schwenk, who was discharged October 12th, 1864, on account of the wound received at Cold Harbor, was commissioned major, and assumed command of the regiment on the 28th day of February, 1865.

When the engagement at Ford Steadman took place, we were doing picket duty along the Appomattox, some distance to the right of Fort McGilvery. Immediately upon receipt of orders from Brigade Headquarters, Major Schwenk left a thin skirmish line in his front, and with the balance of the regiment proceeded to the scene of conflict. The promptness of the Major's action, and the propitious position secured by us enabled the regiment to take a part that drew forth the praise of the Brigade and Division Commanders.

Our loss during the engagement was only two men wounded, viz.:

Francis Starwick, Private, Company B, and William Paulus, Private, Company F.

After the engagement we again returned to camp, where we remained until April 2d, when we moved to the front a little to the left of Fort McGilvery. The plan of attack was for General Wilcox to make a feint on his front. At four o'clock in the morning our artillery opened fire along the entire line. Colonel Ely's Brigade carried the picket line, and about two hundred yards of the main works near the Appomattox. The right wing of the Fiftieth was engaged and participated in the charge, during which John Fritz, of Company "C" was killed, and Franklin Fisher, of the same company was wounded.

At half-past four o'clock, on the morning of the 3d, the flag of the First Michigan Regiment was placed on the Court House—the Fiftieth was either the second or third regiment to enter the city, soon after we were sent across the Appomattox to take charge of everything in that section. Scouts were at once sent out, who secured quite a number of prisoners, cannon, &c. Major Schwenk, who commanded the regiment during the engagement, reported having captured twenty-two cannon, three flags and about one thousand prisoners.

CAMP 50TH REGT., P. V. V., May 11, 1865.

Adjutant.

Sir:—In compliance with orders from Regimental Headquarters, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of Company "G," in front of and about Petersburg, Va., from the 25th day of March, 1865, to the 5th day of April, 1865: "On the morning of the 25th of March, during the attack and capture of Fort Steadman, by the enemy, a detachment of Company "G," consisting of all those in camp who had arms and accoutrements reported to Captain Charles E. Brown, of Company "C," and were marched on a double-quick to the scene of action. When we arrived there they discovered that the enemy had penetrated our lines, and were pushing for the railroad. They were posted on the enemy's flank, and delivered several well directed volleys, doing good execution. After the enemy had been repulsed and quiet restored, they returned to camp without the loss of a man, having done all that was required of them, with credit to themselves, and satisfaction to their commander. After the affair of Fort Steadman, we continued to do picket duty along the Appomattox River, until the morning of the 2d of April, when we received orders to fall in and report with the regiment at Brigade Headquarters, where we arrived sometime before daylight. Just at daylight we were assigned to a position in the pits on the left of Fort Steadman, where we remained until nine o'clock, when we were ordered to Garrison Battery No. 9. We remained in the battery until seven o'clock that evening, (April 2d,) and then marched to the rear of the works, and stacked arms between the battery and the City

Point Railroad, and rested for the night. Early on the morning of the 3d we again took position in the pits, from which we expected to charge, but soon after our arrival there we learned that the enemy had been compelled to evacuate the city of Petersburg and its defences. At daylight we left our works and marched over those of the enemy, and entered with the brigade, the city of Petersburg. We halted in front of the Court House, where we stacked arms until ten o'clock A. M., when we crossed the Appomattox River, and again halted on the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad. At eleven o'clock I received orders from Major Schwenk to proceed with Company "G," on a scout down the Appomattox River. We followed the Fort Clifton Road about five miles, picked up eleven prisoners, took possession of Fort Clifton and two Minor Forts, containing ten large guns, viz.:

Two 100lb Parrots.

Three 32lb Rifled Parrots.

Three 24lb Smooth-bore.

One 10lb Rifled and one small brass Howitzer.

The magazines were well stored with ammunition. At three P. M. we returned to the regiment. We remained on the railroad until the evening of the 5th of April, when we broke camp and marched to Browder's Crossing, a distance of fourteen miles, arriving there on the morning of the 6th of April.

Respectfully,

(Signed,)

H. J. CHRIST,

1st Lieut., Com'd Co. G.

The report of Lieutenant Christ covers the actions of the left wing of the regiment during the 2d and part of the 3d of April.

After returning from Gettysburg the regiment encamped for a few days near the Capitol buildings in the city of Washington, and assisted in quelling a riot at the Baltimore and Ohio depot, when Geo. W. Boyer, of Company "E," was mortally wounded. On the 30th of July, 1865, the regiment was mustered out, having served three years, ten months and five days as an organization.

In compliance to the following recommendations, Major Schwenk was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel on the 15th day of May, and Captain Brumm to Major, May 19th, 1865.

HEADQUARTERS, 3D DIV., 9TH A. C.

March 21st, 1865.

I am well acquainted with the action of Major Schwenk, under the most trying circumstances under which any officers or regiment may be placed in battle, and I cannot say too much in his favor as a cool, brave and temperate officer, he is clearly entitled to this promotion. Captain Brumm was in command of the regiment when it was under my orders at the battle of Poplar Spring Church, September 30th, 1864, and was in fact the only officer with the regiment during the engagement, all the officers present, having mustered out of service the day before, except Lieutenant Gechter, who left the regiment during the battle. Captain Brumm has been in command of the regiment from September 29th, 1864, to February 27th, 1865, and, although the regiment, but a short time under my orders, yet I know from the short time as well as from reports since, that he is an able Commander, and in every way worthy and entitled to promotion, he is also very temperate.

I hereby heartily endorse the foregoing statements, and earnestly recommend the within named officers to the favorable consideration of his excellency.

SACKETTS HARBOR, December 11th.

My Dear Crater:—I send you an epitomised tribute to the old Fiftieth, after so much delay and difficulty overhauling my papers for reports. If there be anything in particular that you find I have not alluded to, please inform me, and with kind regard to old comrades of the regiment.

Believe me,

Truly yours,

O. B. WILCOX.

MADISON BARRACKS, SACKETTS HARBOR, N. Y.

October 11th, 1883.

The Fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteers first came conspicuously under my notice at the Battle of South Mountain, 14th of September, 1862. It had just come out of the scathing fire of Chantilly, and the Second Manassess, as a part of the Second Brigade of the First Division, Ninth Army Corps. On this day, September 14th, Major Overton Commanded the Regiment, and Colonel Christ the Brigade, and here was performed the double feat of changing front under a heavy fire, and checking an incipient panic. This was done well and gallantly, under the cool bravery and good management of Colonel Christ and Major Overton, and during the rest of the fight supporting General Cox's Kanawa Division, from that day forward the regiment was known at my Headquarters, as "Old Reliable."

At Antietam when the long impatiently expected orders to advance were brought, the regiment dashed forward in the most gallant style, and deeply shared with the whole Division, the orders for recall, after we had cleaned our own front, and thought we were in sight of Lee's Headquarter wagons.

Again in the battle of the Wilderness, Ny River and Spottsylvania, the long siege of Petersburg, and the fight for the Weldon Road at Globe Tavern, the Fiftieth shone conspicuously.

The success of Ny River was one of the brilliant little episodes of the war. Our Division, mainly Christ's Brigade, had gained a position, overlooking the road by which the rebels in large numbers, supposed to be Longstreet's Corps, were moving. It was at once a saucy and imprudent position, with a river behind us, and was twice charged, and the chargers repulsed with great determination. In this affair Captain Samuel K. Schwenk, with four companies of the Fiftieth, made a fine bayonet charge, at a critical moment, which probably saved the day, as the enemy had almost gained the crest of the hill. It was an honor, however, which the Seventeenth and Twentieth Michigan, and Seventy-ninth New York came in to share, although not at the point of the bayonet. This, the bayonet charge, was the peculiar glory of Schwenk and his little batallion of the Fiftieth.

At Spottsylvania, when the enemy made their grand charge on the left of the army, which my Division had the honor to hold, the Fiftieth had to fight their way hand to hand through overwhelming numbers, in order to save their colors, which they did successfully though with bloody losses.

On the 18th of June, 1864, in the charge in the Suffolk Railroad Cut in front of Petersburg, the brave old Roman, Colonel Ben Christ, was severely wounded, at the head of his Brigade, but all through the rest of the war as up to this time, the officers and men of "Old Reliable" maintained the enviable reputation they gained in the fight of South Mountain, Brenholtz, Overton, Schwenk and Adjutant Crater, particularly distinguishing themselves.

Very respectfully,

O. B. WILCOX,

Brevet Maj. Gen., U. S. V.
